

Paul Schatrow

is a research engineer working at the Institute of Structures and Design of the German Aerospace Center (DLR). Prior to joining the DLR in 2011, he studied Aerospace Engineering at the University of Stuttgart (Germany). His current research work is on the development of crash concepts for future composite transport aircraft with a focus on the utilization of tension absorption as main absorption concept.